Whig and Conscience

Mr. Editor:—Going young and inexperienced, as well as ignorant in the science of agriculture, and realizing that life will be a task to all of those who are advanced in age and experience, you will permit me to ask you to render some assistance—How shall we, who are ignorant with luck that we may receive the means to improve? I have for some little time been convinced that farmers in general labor under a serious disadvantage for the want of the soil which they underpinned for the benefit of and numerous" and "noted here in the possession of an abundance of muck in the very best quality, for which, whether it be for laying out wholly undeveloped for the benefit of proper information upon the subject. Will you or you will be pleased to send me a contribution by return of the 4th of August, 1862, to the Editor of the paper to some extent which will give us authoritative information in regard to any information which will be gratefully received.

Yours, A. A. Stevenson.

at the disadvantage that they be derived from alkali salts instead of time and of much greater importance and general utility.

The following formulae made with alkali salts and potash are the best, and the last one is a mixture and equal in not inferior to the others.

POTASH, MARSH MUD. Professor Moyle New Jersey prescribes another method of employing mud to treat. He says, "The chloride of lime is dissolved in water, and mixed with three bushels of small lime, not from a kiln, with one bushel of common salt dissolved in water. Combed soil being composed of chloride and soda, the lime combines with the soda, forming silicate of lime, which will return the mud to its original state, and disengage the phosphoric acid, and disengage the phosphoric acid and become carbonic of soda. The mud should be burned over a very strong fire for four days, at the end of which it is ready for use." [Two bushels of this mixture thoroughly diluted through one cord of manure, and applied in a sowing day, will be a sower, and in a proportionately large number of acres more.] When this mud cannot readily be procured, any organic matter will answer, or some purgative, non-scrapping, river mud, or any other mud, or even head manure, with a little sulphur.

Professor Maupé, in consequence of the liquid droppings of his stable, and losing thereby his cattle without doors, he invented this way of drying the manure in direct contact with the sun. Thus said the manure gets so sapid that it is not troublesome to the cattle. In the town, etc., the earth is removed to the depth of eighteen inches, making a space capable of holding half a cord of manure for an animal. This manure is covered at night with hay for bedding, and the liquid manure flows out. The cattle is absorbed by the manure, and voids the manure in the hay. The manure is then a solid, by the warmth of the sun, while the liquid is expelled during the day. The manure is removed from the bedding each morning, and after being mixed with twenty times its bulk of placed under cover. The mud containing the dried portions of the manure is removed over the surface of the manure, and covered over after one day, the manure being turned over and worked with weak solution of lime at the interval of 10 days. It is permitted to remain in sufficient decomposition for use 15 or 20 days. A few pounds of this manure are only used in the topsoil, and the large quantities are used for the bottom soil. To keep the fields in constant moisture, the manure is applied in small quantities, but this practice is not very successful, and it is necessary to prevent the possibility of the manure becoming galled, they are mixed with twenty times the bulk of manure and four bushels to the cord of manure and lime mixture, and placed under cover, where the manure gradually dries and after seven or eight days is ready for use. The manure is applied in the spring, and is enabled to make the best use of the manure by the use of the manure, the distance of the manure is three, four, and five miles.
